About the conference

Women make up just over half the global population, yet women's health has long been treated as a niche. Chronic underfunding, limited research, and neglect have created stark gender health inequalities. This is evidenced in McKinsey's 2022 report, Closing the Health Gap, where they found women spend 25% more time in poor health than men. Additionally, closing this gap could add £1 trillion to the global economy annually by 2040.

Thanks to a growing wave of entrepreneurs and innovators, women's health is finally emerging from the shadows, with the independent sector leading the charge.

As this market continues to gather momentum, LaingBuisson Events is proud to introduce the inaugural Women's Health & FemTech Conference.

This one-day event brings together C-suite and senior stakeholders from across independent healthcare, investment, and insurance, alongside FemTech founders and start-ups, to explore what's already driving change and what still needs to happen to make gender health equality a reality. Backed by the latest market intelligence, we'll explore areas such as the drivers of success in women's health clinics, how technology is widening access to care, and the strategies needed to attract greater investment into the sector.

Delegates will gain an all-access pass to the day-long conference on 21 October in London. With this, they'll benefit from:

- Exclusive insights with a unique commercial focus on the private and voluntary sectors
- Expert keynotes from thought leaders across women's health, innovation and investment
- Panel discussions with a comprehensive blend of sector partner perspectives
- Audience Q&A to put your questions directly to the experts
- Dedicated networking to build the relationships that move this agenda forward
